Multitasking

Into the kitchen downstairs I came, the kitchen table was strewn with papers when I came, and my brother Calvin, a teenager at the time, was rummaging through cabinets with his backpack gaping open. (1) He had fifteen minutes to catch the school bus, and We were; clearly, enacting, the Daily drama, called “Will calvin make it to the bus stop on time”? (2) I had an hour before I had to catch the city bus to my own community college class, so I had time to play watcher (3), sitting down on a stool at the kitchen island and pouring myself a bowl of cereal.

Around me, Calvin churned in a hurricane of activity, (4) his lunch half-packed, one shoe tied neatly, the other shoe jammed onto his foot with its laces trailing, and his papers half-crammed into his backpack. are you going to help or just sit there watching calvin asked as he shoved his now cold cup of instant oatmeal into the microwave including the metal spoon hed used to stir it (5)

It seemed only kind to prevent Calvin from setting the microwave on fire, so I retrieved the cup before he could press the start button, extracted (6) the spoon, and returned the cup to the microwave. I looked at the mess and asked him if he couldn’t just do one thing at a time. (7)

“I’ll never make it to school on time if I do that,” Calvin remonstrated (8), cramming a banana into his lunch box with an extremely hard shove. (9)

He would clearly never make it to school on time if he didn’t, and I was feeling my own morning equilibriumm (10) disturbed by the spectacle of Calvin’s attempts to multitask. “I’ll pack your lunch,” I offered. “Pick up the papers on the table and put them in your backpack neatly so they’re not all crumpled into balls.” (11)

Calvin began stacking the papers in his backpack, looking relieved to have someone seize control of the morning’s proceedings. “I made oatmeal earlier but, then everything fell out of my backpack; and while, I was picking that up, I remembered I needed lunch.” (12)

The microwave, as if in reply, chimed, and I fished the cup of steaming oatmeal out of it, and then handed it to Calvin. (13) “If you’re planning to sprint to the bus stop this morning, you might also want to tie your shoe,” I pointed out, and sat back down to eat my cereal in peace.
