

This document is electronically version controlled.
Verify printed document is the current version before use.

Kentucky

Practice Set

Grade 8

RE08923255095

Who is responsible for fixing homework problem

Date	Comments	Version
4/20/20	Origination	1
6/2	Replace P1(S9), P2(S4) & P3(S6)	2

P1

AAAYIP13820000580723

In the text "Homework Tips for Parents" the author is saying parents and educators are responsible for fixing the problem of homework. The text says " It is the job of parents and educators to maximize the benefit of homework and minimize the costs," (paragraph, 5). This shows the author is saying it is the role of the parents and teachers to help with the homework. In the text " Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework" the author says the teachers can fix the problem of homework for now. The text says," Even as we collaboratively press for policy changes at the district or individual school level, all teachers can act now, as individuals, to ease the strain on overworked kids," (paragraph, 5). This shows the author says the teachers can do something now while they try to get the schools to ban homework such as going easy on the kids who are being over worked.

P2

AAAYIP13820000545748

The author of "Homework Tips for Parents" is responsible for fixing the problem of homework. They are responsible for this because they gave resonable explanations of why schools should reduce homework. For example, in paragraph 6, the author explanes how much homework should be given out to kids kindergarden through high school. To implement these fixes, teachers could try a expriment with their students to see what would happen when they could do their homework whenever and see if their grades increase or decrease

P3

AAAYIP13820000597408

In the passage "homework tips for Parents" and "Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework" they show that several people are responsible for homework changes. To start with, teachers are responsible. As the text, "Why I Think Schools Should Abolish Homework" states, "That's the way we will get to a sane work schedule for kids: by simultaneously pursuing changes big and small." Parents are also responsible for changing how homework affects our lives. As the passage, "Homework Tips for Parents" states, "Reading at home is especially important for young children."

P4

AAAYIP13820000179475

i think we shouldnt have homework because instead of doing leisurly activities we are stuck indoors doing homework.but it can" improve remembering and understanding,develop study skills".

P5

AAAYIP13820000480277

The authors both claim that kids should have less homework. Many kids have very busy schedules after school with sports, family, and other extracurricular activities. This doesn't give them enough time to complete the very large amounts of homework that they receive. In "Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework" it states, "Miller's response is a great model for us all. HE decided to limit assignments in his own class to 20 minutes a night...His students didn't suddenly fail. Their test scores remained stable. And they started using their more breathable schedule to do more creative, thoughtful work". This shows that by limiting homework time it is beneficial to students. It can help them be more creative because they have more time. Another way the authors show how homework can be unnecessary is because it can promote cheating. In "Homework Tips for Parents" it says, " Homework can lead to undesirable character traits if it promotes cheating, either through the copying of assignments for help with homework that goes beyond tutoring". This tells that homework can be not good for students because it can promote cheating which would lead to homework not even being helpful for kids. Teachers can fix this problem by reducing the amount of homework that they give out every night.

P6

AAAYIP13820000298021

Teachers are responsible for fixing the problem of homework. Parents cannot assign homework. In "homework tips for parents" it says, "Homework can prevent children from taking part in leisure-time and community activities that also teach important life skills." In "why I think all schools should abolish homework" it says, "His students didn't suddenly fail. Their test scores remained stable." I feel we should abolish or at least lower the amount of time children spend on homework so that they can lead less stressful lives and develop other skills outside of school, and spend more time with their families.

P7

AAAYIP13820000264034

I think teachers should make the homework assignments more fun for the students and then the students would actually want homework. "Homework tips for parents" states the Home work can have may benefits for young childeren, it can help them remember and study for assignments. I also think that giving less homework is also helpful because what happens is that the kids get alot of komework from every class and they cant do it all. Giving less and fun homework assignments will result in more assignments being turned in with the kids fine with doing more.

P8

AAAYIP13820000517015

The author claims that the school educators and parents could be responsible in making a big change in the way people look at homework for kids. In the text Mr. Miller gives many ways that teachers and educators could minimize the amount of homework kids have for example he decided to limit assignments in his own class to 20 minutes a night and that will make it a max 2 hour a night homework time. "Just by him lowering it it made a change so imagine if everyone made a slight change as educators. Also in the passage it says "As parents and students, we can also organize to make homework more an exception than a rule." That could have a big change on homework because kids might enjoy it more if it wasn't a rule they had to do instead of just an exception that would make them feel good about if they did do it. Just little things can make a big difference and I think educators and parents play a big role..

P9

AAAYIP13820000766997

Both of the authors claim that the teachers are responsible for fixing the problem of homework. The reason for this is because the teachers are the people who actually assign the work and expect it to get done. Both the parents or the students get to decide what to do and what not to assign to the students. Mike Miller, an English teacher, tried to fix the amount of homework put on overworked kids. Matt Miller "decided to limit assignments in his own class to 20 minutes a night," and "His students didn't suddenly fail. Their test scores remained stable." This shows how the teacher made a change while also giving an example of what could be done to fix the problem and it worked. Not only that, but in the article, "Homework tips for parents," it states that "research shows that shorter and more frequent assignments may be more effective than longer but fewer assignments," for children. Both of these articles overall are showing who is responsible for fixing the problem which is the teachers and giving examples of how the problems should be fixed.

P10

AAAYIP13820000673890

the problem of homework is that while you are doing it if not assigned and done properly it can have negative effects on the child so parents tend to help with this making the child feel better about doin it at home.

8This document is electronically version controlled.
Verify printed document is the current version before use.

This document is electronically version controlled.
Verify printed document is the current version before use.

Kentucky
Reading
Practice Set 2
Grade 8
RE923255095

Who is responsible for fixing homework problems

Date	Comments	Version
2/16/22	Origination	A

P2-1

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000202429

The authors claim helps fix the problem of homework because some students rush through their homework just to get it done. I think teachers should give out lighter homework so students actually take their time and actually understand the concept they are being taught. In the text it says "educators and parents worry that students will grow bored if they are required to spend too much time on schoolwork."

P2-2

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000446010

The authors claim that the teachers are responsible for the problem of homework and they should fix it by reducing the amount of homework they give or they can still give but give homework that doesn't take too long but more frequently because in the article "Homework Tips for Parents" it states that longer homework but that is given out less is less beneficial than homework that takes less time but is given out alot more. Int the passage "Why I think All Schools Should Abolish homework" states that they should reduce the amount of homework because in paragraph 4 it states "He decided to limit his assignment in his own class to 20 minutes a night. His students didn't suddenly fail and thier test scores remained stable." In paragraph 6 it says that students need time to be able to do other things other than trying to catch up on school work/homework like play a sport,be apart of something like boy/girl scouts.

P2-3

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000684946

i think the students were the ones that fixxed the problem

P2-4

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000143521

Parents and students should be responsible for fixing the problem of homework. Evidence from the text, "Why I think all schools should abolish homework", is that as parents and students, we can also organize to make homework the exception rather than the rule. Also, more evidence to support this from the text, "Homework tips for parents", It is the job of parents and educators to maximize the benefit of homework and minimize the costs.

P2-5

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000557847

The authors believe the parents and educators are responsible for fixing the problem of homework, and that if the parents and educators can show they can still do good at school with less homework then that could help the problem. The text "Why I think all schools should abolish homework" states, "He decided to limit assignments in his own class to 20 minutes a night... Their test scores remained stable." This text evidence shows me that one teacher did try giving his students less homework and it can back positive the students score did remain stable. The text "Why I think all schools should abolish homework" states, "...they started using their more breathable schedule to do more creative, thoughtful work." This text evidence shows me that after giving less homework the students are having a better less stress life. The text "Homework tips for parents" states, "Homework can lead to undesirable character traits if it promotes cheating." This text evidence tells me that if parents and educators don't give less homework or none then it could lead to students not learning at all they could start copying each other's work, lowering test scores by a lot. This is why parents and educators are responsible for fixing the homework problem and how they should fix it correctly to help the students.

P2-6

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000472396

The authors claim that the schools or teachers is responsible for fixing the "problem" of homework as one of them say that homework should be limited to only twenty minutes a night in paragraph 4 of "Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework" In "Homework Tips for Parents" it states how the length of homework could be effecting students based on their age as it says ""For young children, research shows that shorter and more frequent assignments may be more effective than longer but fewer assignments" "This is because young children have short spans of attention and need to feel they have successfully completed a task" It also says that Mike Miller in "Why I Think All schools should Abolish Homework" found a forgotten policy on homework limiting it to two hours a night total including all classes.

P2-7

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000222001

The authors claim that parents are responsible for fixing the problem of homework. They believe, in order to implement these fixes, homework should be limited to two hours a night. In the text of, "Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework," Miller says, "It's like jumping off a high dive with your kids future. If we reduce homework to two hours or less, is my kid really going to be ok." Miller uses this statement as an example of how parents question the idea of limiting homework. Many believe homework given by teachers positively effects their children. They are worried that if they have a smaller amount of homework, they won't understand the content as well and their grades will have a negative outcome. To help the parents fix this problem, Miller studied his classrooms grades with and without the decreased homework amount and found that the students grades did not change. He did this to convince parents that less homework will not effect their child's grade. In the text of, "Homework Tips for Parents," it says, "It is the jobs of both parents and educators to maximize the benefit of homework and minimize the costs." The author of the text believes homework does have many of the benefits that parents often support. Although, too much homework can cause students to struggle. The author suggests parents can fix this by limiting homework to a few hours each day. Both of these articles use benefits and costs to help the readers, specifically parents, understand how they can help their child succeed by limiting homework.

P2-8

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000375415

In my opinion to solve the problem is to lower or get rid of homework. Well we are talking about kids and if they're doing homework all the time then they will not have fun. If you lower or get rid of homework then they will have more free time to have fun and to spend time with their family. So that is how you solve the problem of too much homework.

P2-9

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000124362

The authors believe that parents and teachers are responsible for fixing the problem of homework. In the article "Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework" the author says "Short of that, we can at least sensibly agree on a cap limiting kids to a 40-hour-workweek and fewer hours for younger children." The author is saying that we need to do something as in the parents and educators of the children and help to shorten homework time for the kids. In the text "Homework Tips for Parents" the U.S Department of Education says "Educators and parents worry that students will grow bored if they are required to spend too much time on schoolwork." This shows that educators and parents think that homework isn't that beneficial and needs to be limited. If they think this, then they should try to make a difference.

P2-10

DOC_ID: AAAYIP13820000202429

The authors claim helps fix the problem of homework because some students rush through their homework just to get it done. I think teachers should give out lighter homework so students actually take their time and actually understand the concept they are being taught. In the text it says "educators and parents worry that students will grow bored if they are required to spend too much time on schoolwork."