Both text analyze who is responsible for fixing the problem of homework here let me me tell you who is responsible. Teacher, students, and parents they all play a magnificent roll in homework. The teacher has a roll bc he/she gives students the homework becasue they believe in their students and want them to try harder than they have in a long time and tehy want to see if u can handle that type if responsibility. The students plats a part because its their chice if they want to do it or not because they'll ve the one getting the grade and I think some students like homework beacuse they want to see how much they have improved since like 3 years before they started doing homework. The parents also play a roll in this type of thing to beacuse they want to see if their child or children are independent enough to do their own homework now they understand if ur like in kindergarden but no we are in middle school now we have to take some accountabilty and responsibilty because if we dont who will no one that what your parents and teacher want you to have homework they believe in you and what you do.

the authors claim for being responsible for fixing the "problem of homework" is that they reduced the amount of homework into something easy and quick while at the same time the students are learning something. According to "why i think all schools should abolish homework" is "his students didn't suddenly fail, their test scores remain stable" by lowering the amount of homework students won't fail and another piece of evidence from "homework tips for parents" is that "homework can have benefits for young children" this shows that students learn from homework but the homeworks should be less

In both of these texts it claims that a decreased amount of homework can give benefits especially for younger children. It makes you think that teachers need to think of what homework and how much homework they are giving you. In "Why I think All Schools Should Abolish Homework" it states "limiting kids to a 40-hour workweek- and fewer hours for younger children." In "Homework Tips for Parents" it states "Homework can have many benefits", "but it needs to be properly assigned and monitored." It says this because they also say that they believe kids will grow bored and give up if too much homework is given out that they have to spend their time on. Both of these texts kind of push this responsibility off on the teachers to fix, but there are more to this problem than teachers.

Both of these texts like I said before push this too much homework problem off on teachers. There is more to it than that. You have to think about it in a way that helps students. All kids are different and learn differently. We have to think that some kids like to learn and work on their own, so they like learning from their homework. Also we have to take into account that some kids are smarter than others, and do not really need homework to learn. We can't just take into account what the teachers and parents think because they really do not know what is going through the mind of the students. This is why we should talk to the students more to try and fix this problem. Like the texts said there are many benefits, but you just need to manage the problems right.

In the passage "homework tips for Parents" and "Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework" they show that several people are responsible for homework changes. To start with, teachers are responsible. As the text, "Why I Think Schools Should Abolish Homework" states, "That's the way we will get to a sane work schedule for kids: by simultaneously pursuing changes big and small." Parents are also responsible for changing how homework affects our lives. As the passage, "Homework Tips for Parents" states, "Reading at home is especially important for young children."

the problem with homework is that kids and teens alike done like it they think its extra work that doesnt help there grade but little do they know it actualkly does

Vicki Abeles' claim is responsible for fixing the "problem" of homework. Students should have a limit of how many minutes are used on homework after school. According "Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework" in paragraph 4 it says,"He decided to limit assignments in his own class to 20 minutes a night" That kept the vstudents test scores stable and it gave them more time for other activities after school.

DOC_ID: AAA YIP13820000591898

In the articles they both claim that there is a problem to be fixed by someone and there should be stuff to fix these problems in each article is a different story in the article "Homework Tips for parents" they say that homework is good and it helps students they say the problem needs to be fixed by both teachers and parents and even somewhat students. In paragraph eight they say "research shows that shorter and more frequent assignments may be more effective than longer but fewer assignments. This is because young children have short spans of attention and need to feel they have successfully completed a task." they also say that there is an issue in paragraph five. "The issue for educators and parents is not which list of effects the positive or negative is correct. To a degree, both are. It is the job of parents and educators to maximize the benefit of homework and minimize the cost."

In the article "why i think all schools should abolish homework." in this article they say homework is bad and they should abolish homework completely they say teachers should get away from homework and do all work in class time they think everything should be done in the hour class they have and not in students after school hours. In this article they say in paragraph four "He decided to limit assignments in his own class to 20 minutes a night."....."His students didn't fail"

This shows that teachers do not need to give out big assignments little or no assignments the students will still do good on the test and still be learning in that hour there with you. Also it has a bigger impact on kids to do it in class learning step by step with you teacher is way better than with your parent or with a youtube video on something your teacher assigned you to do and you don't know how i know this from my own experience.

In both texts they have different opinions and thoughts on the stuff one thinks homework is good and one thinks that it is bad and should be gone even though these two sides are against each other in each article they both used evidence on each other's side even though one side wanted to abolish homework they still used facts about homework that was for homework and same with the side that wanted to keep homework they still used stuff against homework this is called a counter claim.

The author claims that the teachers are responsible for fixing the problem of homework and what should be done to implement these fixes. In, Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework, the author states, "Resistance even to this reasonable limit will be rife. Mike Miller, an English teacher... found this out firsthand when he spearheaded a homework comitee to rethink the usual approach..." "There was a lot of fear in the community", Miller said. "Its like jumping off a high dive with your kid's futures." This explains that the teacher in this instance called upon the comitee to have the rule be reasoned with. Proving that the teachers are responsible for putting a limit on homework.

The principal and teachers are responsible for homework. They need to be convinced that homework isn't helpful. Kids can do homework at school instead of taking their work home.

Students getting less work time in class seems to be working for a lot of students.

Q2-2

DOC_ID: AAA YIP13820000557847

The authors believe the parents and educators are responsible for fixing the problem of homework, and that if the parents and educators can show they can still do good at school with less homework then that could help the problem. The text "Why I think all schools should abolish homework" states, "He decided to limit assignments in his own class to 20 minutes a night... Their test scores remained stable." This text evidence shows me that one teacher did try giving his students less homework and it can back positive the students score did remain stable. The text "Why I think all schools should abolish homework" states, "...they started using their more breathable schedule to do more creative, thoughtful work." This text evidence shows me that after giving less homework the students are having a better less stress life. The text "Homework tips for parents" states, "Homework can lead to undesirable character traits if it promotes cheating." This text evidence tells me that if parents and educators don't give less homework or none then it could lead to students not learning at all they could start copying each other's work, lowering test scores by a lot. This is why parents and educators are responsible for fixing the homework problem and how they should fix it correctly to help the students.

Q2-3

The people who should fix this problem in the authors eyes are teachers and parents.heres an example "As parents , we can also organize to make homework the exception rather than the. we insist that every family, teacher, and student be allowed to opt out of assinments." and "homework tips for parents"they say"The issue of educators and parents is not which list of effects, the positive or negative, is correct. to a degree, both are.it is the job of parents and educators to maximize the benefit of homework and minimize the costs.

Q2-5

the authors claim that teachers and sometimes parents (PTA) are responsible for fixing these problems. in paragraph 4 of "Why I Think All Schools Should Abolish Homework", Miller (a teacher), " decided to limit assignments in his own class to 20 minutes a night". In this article, a teacher takes action to shorten homework assignments. In the second article " Homework tips for parents", paragraph 5 states that "The issue for educators and parents is not which list of effect, the positive or negative, is correct. To a degree, both are. It is the job of parents and educators to maximize the benefit of homework and minimize the costs". this passage says that it is the job of parents and educators (teachers). These show that teachers and parents must take action.

Q2-6

Some people think that less homework will limit students ability to work. I think the same. that those people do. Some students go home with tons of homework. Why come home with tons of homework when you just got done doing work in a eight hour school day? This will make students not want to learn or do the homeowrk. What should be done is that schools should limit homework so not only they can have fun, they can take part in leisure-time and community activities. You could work around your scedule if you have work to be done.

The person responsible for fixing the problem of homework is Mike miller and the PTA. According to "Why I think all schools should abolish homework", It says,"Millers response is a great model for us all. He decided to limit assignments in hiis own class to 20 minutes a night." According to "homework tips for parents", its says," The national PTA suggests that homework for children is most effective when its not over 20 minutes a day."

DOC_ID: AAA YIP13820000446010

The authors claim that the teachers are responsible for the problem of homework and they should fix it by reducing the amount of homework they give or they can still give but give homework that doesn't take too long but more frequently because in the article "Homework Tips for Parents" it states that longer homework but that is given out less is less beneficial than homework that takes less time but is given out alot more. Int the passage "Why I think All Schools Should Abolish homework" states that they should reduce the amount of homework because in paragraph 4 it states "He decided to limit his assignment in his own class to 20 minutes a night. His students didn't suddenly fail and thier test scores remained stable." In paragraph 6 it says that students need time to be able to do other things other than trying to catch up on school work/homework like play a sport,be apart of something like boy/girl scouts.
